Tracey Gurd is legal officer for the International Justice Program of the Open Society Justice Initiative. Based in the New York office, her work focuses mainly on the Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia, the Special Court for Sierra Leone, and the International Criminal Court. She has previously worked as a legal academic researcher, a journalist and also as an international policy advisor for the Australian government in both Australia and Central Europe. Tracey co-edited an academic collection on women and armed conflict, Listening to the Silences: Women and War. She has a combined arts/law degree with honors from Australian National University and a Masters in Public and International Law from the University of Melbourne. Ms. Gurd will discuss the successes and challenges of incorporating gender into the work of the International Criminal Court (ICC) in the context of its first trial of Congolese militia leader Thomas Lubanga.