APPROVAL INSTRUCTIONS

First-year courses: In general, nonlaw students are not allowed to take first year law classes. On very rare occasions, Ph.D. candidates in other departments may be granted permission by the Law School Dean of Students' office to take a first year class. Permission of the instructor is also required but should not be sought before obtaining the permission of the Law School Dean of Students. For further information, contact the Law School Registrar's Office at: law.registrar@cornell.edu

Upperclass courses: require (1) approval of the instructor and (2) approval of the Law School Registrar after all law students have finalized schedules and enrollment does not exceed enrollment cap.

This form is for the Law School only. It is your responsibility to secure any forms and approvals required by your own college.

Honor Pledge

I verify that I have read the Law School policies concerning the Standards of Professional Conduct and the Code of Academic Integrity (Law School Code of Honor) which are located on the Registrar's website in the Law School Policies section: http://registrar.lawschool.cornell.edu/lawschool_policies.cfm

Further, I pledge that I will comply with the Law School rules and the University Code of Conduct. By signing this pledge, I acknowledge that as a student in a professional school at Cornell University, I am expected to conduct myself in a manner that exemplifies honesty, integrity and good character.

In addition to the policies concerning Standards of Professional Conduct and the Law School Code of Honor, other rules and policies govern Cornell Law School students. Below are the Internet locations of these policies. I know that it is my personal responsibility to familiarize myself with these policies.
